SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes.

SENATOR JENSEN: I've been on that site many, many times. Of course, it's been used in...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Did you wear galoshes?

SENATOR JENSEN: (Laugh) No.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay.

SENATOR JENSEN: I work for a company that used to deliver materials down there and I worked for the U.P., matter of fact, for two and a half years.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: So you were working on the railroad.

SENATOR JENSEN: I certainly was, enjoyed every minute of it.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Do you think that there are any pollutants in that soil?

SENATOR JENSEN: Oh, I would imagine there are some. It's my understanding they have taken steps and tests and they have that under control.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Under control. How deep into the soil would you say a person would have to go or an enterprise to create a condition where building can occur?

SENATOR JENSEN: I really don't know. I...there have been tests made down there, both by U.P. and others, and I think that they really, as compared to some other sites anyway, felt this was somewhat minimal to treat.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Treat?

SENATOR JENSEN: What...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: The word "treat" means that there must be the application of chemicals or the removal of chemicals or
